SECTION 2

You should read all of the passage below before you begin the test. You will see that there are 12 missing words in the passage. Fill in each of the 12 blanks by choosing the best word from the list below so that the passage makes sense.

This study arose from questions that were posed over the three years I acted as a work experience tutor for around thirty secondary pupils who were about to have their first taste of working life through the school'sexperience programme. The task was to brief them beforeplacements, visit them while they were with employers, andthem on return to school. I noted that thestated choices of placement were predominantly in caring, whereasstated choices were wider (although none included caring), andgenerally for occupations commanding higher financial rewards than those by girls. Many of the girls demonstrated ability that not reflected in their choices, and expressed what appeared be unreasonably low expectations for their future careers. Working an education service which promotes equality of opportunity, and makes no overt attempts to channel girls into traditionally occupations, I tried to make sense of the contradictions.

Twelve of the following 17 words have been taken out of the above passage. Choose one word that best fits each blank space. Use your choice of word only once and write it down in the order in which you think it appears in the passage.

You may use this box to try out your ideas before filling in the blanks.

Passage 1

Read the passage carefully. Answer each of the 6 following questions. Refer to the passage to find the answers.

About 2340 hours I was in uniform on duty on patrol in Lumsden Street when I heard a message by personal radio from P.C. Low. He had come across a housebreaking at No. 6 Belleview Road and wished other units to attend.

I attended locus immediately.

Belleview Road runs in a north to south direction. No. 6, which is occupied by witness Mr Donald Howe, is a private dwelling house situated on the east side of the road. The rear garden of No. 6 backs onto a wooded area which gives onto the shorefront. The north part of the house consists of a large open plan sitting/dining room which has window units facing onto the front garden. A central hallway leads to bedrooms situated at the south west front of the house. A large kitchen is situated at the middle rear of the house.

Automatically operated proximity lights which are fitted at the rear of the house illuminate the back of the house including the garden.

On arrival at locus I saw the whole of the house was in darkness. One of the sitting room windows at the front of the house was half open. I took up position at the front of the house by the half open window while P.C. Low went to check the rear of the house. He reported by radio that the rear kitchen door was open and she was entering to check the premises for any intruder.

No person was found in the house.

On examining the front sitting room window it was seen that it had been forced by a blue coloured jemmy being inserted into the bottom of the window frame thus overcoming the window catches by physical force.

On entering the house it was found that the electricity had been switched off at the mains preventing the proximity lights at the rear of the house operating.

On examining the exterior of the house it was found that an attempt had been made to lever open the rear patio door of the sitting room but this had been unsuccessful.

Every room in the house had been ransacked.

Give one word or short phrase in answer to each of the 6 following questions. Where appropriate use any words or phrases from the passage you have read in your answers.

Passage 1

Passage 2

Read the following passage carefully . Answer each of the 6 following questions. Refer to the passage to find the answers.

The school board in the study did not set out with the idea of conducting research. Their enquiry was in response to the issue of playtime that had been raised at one of their meetings. Once the issue had been raised, problems were identified by collecting and analysing evidence. This subsequently led to action being taken.

Parents were already concerned about playtime. Two hundred children between the ages of four and a half and twelve years 'played' in a large, featureless tarmac area. Before the formation of the school board, and before playground supervision became the duty of the janitors, the parents had initiated a playground rota. Several of the board members had served on this rota, with experiences ranging from evicting inebriate tramps and stray dogs, to stopping 'bloody' fights. It was not surprising that an article by Reva Klein in the Times Educational Supplement entitled 'School play fails to impress the critics', served as a catalyst for raising the issue at school board level. The article claimed that featureless space was 'alien to children's needs' and the school environment itself was at least 50% responsible for behaviour problems. This article was circulated to the members of the school board and playtime was put on the agenda.

The school board decided that as the children were the main players, their views should be sought. They produced a short questionnaire that was distributed to every child in the school. The questions were open-ended to encourage wide - ranging responses from the children. Although some of the younger classes produced a joint answer sheet as the result of classroom discussions, the rest of the children submitted individual sheets. Teachers were co-operative in distributing and encouraging the children's participation which ensured 100% returns. The children were keen to co-operate and delighted to have their opinions sought. Some of them included much detail and went to great lengths to suggest improvements.

The completed questionnaires were collected and studied by the school board and the children's concerns addressed.

Give one word or short phrase in answer to each of the 6 following questions. Where appropriate use any words or phrases from the passage you have read in your answers.

Study the example.
